This seminar will be held as a public lecture and serves as the first session of the GNP intensive course, An Introduction to Cultural Translation (1C880).

The seminar explores the role of translation and intercultural mediation in the construction of cultures and the formation of individual and collective identities. It also introduces the historical development of Translation and Interpreting Studies, examining how translation has functioned not only as a linguistic practice but also as a process of cultural transmission and transformation.

Ovidi Carbonell i Cortés is a Full Professor of Translation Studies at the University of Salamanca, Spain. His field of research is Translation Studies, especially translation theory, ideology and critical discourse analysis applied to TS, cultural translation, cultural representation, intercultural communication, technical and scientific translation (English / Spanish / Catalan / Arabic / Japanese).
